Shampoo You out Nov. 16th via God? Records

US Starts Nov. 9th in Indianapolis

*“They’re sleeker this time, more melodic and a little less hazy than 2016’s Motor Earth bashings.” –
Stereogum*

“A new wave rock wake up call” – Brooklyn Vegan

Chicago's Axis: Sova have shared “New Disguise,” the second single off their forthcoming LP, Shampoo You, out November 16th via Drag City imprint, GOD? Records. Fast, sharp, and wild, the song veers from Axis: Sova's psychedelic trajectory with clean-cut guitars atop head-clearing lyrics. “New Disguise’ is an awakening song. The narrator struggles to fit in and find a place in this world before experiencing a moment of self-assured awareness, discovering those around them to be alien,” says front man Brett Sova. “We’ve all been there at some point--spent time existing in a bizarre void of apathy and lethargy, perpetuating sameness all around us, noticing nearly everyone we know exists there, too, for a time."

Shampoo You is the third Axis: Sova album, following 2015's Early Surf and 2016's Motor Earth. With each succession, the Axis sound shape morphs in subtle, yet definitive ways. Now, with Shampoo You, the impact is unprecedentedly direct and connective, the amusement of rock-making turned thrillingly alive, in the present!

Axis: Sova has always been a rock band, even when the "band" was just Brett Sova and his Roland TR66 creating a surging maelstrom of reverberant fuzz, with guitars foregrounded and wailing at length, while beats distended the depths. But Shampoo You sounds the arrival of the trio version – Sova and live mainstays Tim Kaiser (guitar) and Jeremy Freeze (bass) -- in trademark Axis style: relentless tempo with distorted, interlocking guitar concussions, and vocals that howl of other worldly mutation. It's the first Axis: Sova album written, performed, and recorded live to tape as a three piece. They've honed in on a sleek transport for their new sounds, with tightly conceived power-punk and classic pop touches creating memorably melodic (and harmonic) contours.

Axis: Sova's Midwest tour runs November 9-16 with more tour dates are set to be announced. All shows are listed below.
