"A ferrous wasteland of synthesizer overhung by evaporated strings and guitar merge into a remarkably complete sonic landscape — the land and sky of a new world, with its own alien physics, its own genesis and apocalypse." – Pitchfork on "Singularity" [BEST NEW MUSIC]

It has been a very successful 2018 for Jon Hopkins, from the release of his new album, Singularity, released this past spring via Domino, to sold-out touring around the world. Today, Hopkins shares a heavy-hitting remix of the album's title track by ANNA, one of techno's most captivating and in-demand new producers. After cutting her teeth in clubs around Sao Paolo from the age of 14, ANNA has slowly risen to be one of the scene's most respected names, with releases on Kompakt and NovaMute, along with support from Sven Väth, Marcel Dettmann and Richie Hawtin, to name a few. Building on the original "Singularity," ANNA's remix blends rugged techno and transcendent electronics, which mirrors the pinnacle of the album's motion, delivering a claustrophobic yet uplifting energy.

Described by PAPER as "hauntingly gorgeous," the Seb Edwards-directed video for "Singularity" was released this fall. Upon the video's release it was named a "Best Video of the Week" by Stereogum, and has since won the Best Dance Video at the UK Video Music Awards.
