A rippling, gorgeous collection of beat-driven compositions that radiate warmth and light, Fujisan completes the thematic EP trilogy kicked off with 2015’s Behind the Moon and continued with 2017’s Leaving—and it also represents a full-circle for the artist himself, years after surviving a life-threatening accident that he persevered beyond to continue pursuing his artistic passions.

Written and recorded over a year and a half, the seven-track Fujisan is a reflection on the positive aspects of life—a sense of breaking through and moving forward that imbues the project as a whole, from the evocative thump of “Ecocline Patterns” to the squishy, effervescent sway of closing track “Luck of the Mountains.”

"It's more shiny, less melancholic—more hopeful for a bright future," Engintalay explains. "I wanted to get out of my comfort zone and bring some new sounds. I always have the same way of creating. We compose a lot of tracks and then look at the message I want to give through the project. I wanted to close this triptych with a seven-song EP."

Inspired by a warm Japanese spring, Engintalay describes Fujisan as "a life test after every challenge I've gone through, physically and musically. It's very spiritual, representing climbing mountains and breaking through walls to get further in life." And Feynman is along for the ride, too; along with contributing to sound and art direction, he lends his talents to the lusciously unfolding tick-tock techno of "Mango." "He's always giving me strength to put the final point on the project," Engintalay enthuses about Feynman's contributions.

"I'm always trying to bring some faith and hope—it's always love," Engintalay explains. "They told me I'd never walk again, and now I'm walking and running. It's about going through the difficulties of life and challenging yourself to be the best. Sometimes, if you work for it, you can get it. "
