Caroline Rose will release her new album, Superstar, this Friday, March 6th on New West Records. Superstar is a glitter-filled cinematic pop record that tells the story of an odd anti-hero on a quest to become a someone. Following previously released songs “Freak Like Me” and “Feel The Way I Want,” the latter which Rose recently performed for her television debut on Late Night with Seth Meyers, she now presents “Do You Think We’ll Last Forever?” This final pre-release single opens with a groovy bassline as Rose expresses the anxiety that comes with seeing a new partner. Eventually, it ends in a full blown freakout of bottled up nervous energy, bursting with synth, anthemic percussion, and Rose's emotive vocals.

"When I started forming the narrative for Superstar, I knew I wanted the first half of the record to feel upbeat in order to mimic the narrator's excitement in following this big dream," says Rose. "Do You Think We'll Last Forever?" is one of these tracks that showcases the false bravado the character has, but also exposes a few more cracks in their veneer of self-confidence. The song is fun, but it's also tense, like a rubber band that's stretched until it snaps. It's not a love song, but rather a song about the anxiety that comes with the excitement of potential love. Is this person falling for me too? Am I good enough? Are we on the same page? Anyone who's had a passionate fling knows this feeling, so I tried to get across that the narrator is just like any other uncool person with anxiety issues."
