“Tim Presley likes to spend time with himself. There is nobody I would rather spend time with either. His mind is gold. I find myself both jealous of and grateful for his casual conjuring of the familiar through an unfamiliar lens (or wait, is it the other way ‘round?). Engagement through absurdity. This man is a movement of one.”

– Cate Le Bon

Today, Anthology Editions announces Under the Banner of Concern, a new book of drawings and poetry by San Francisco-based artist, musician and producer Tim Presley (White Fence, DRINKS). The book is out August 25th and is available for pre-order now.

Preview Under the Banner of Concern

Under the Banner of Concern features art from Presley's eponymous 2019 exhibition at Chicago's Soccer Club Club and Los Angeles' The Pit, as well as previously unreleased works and new poetry. Presley's black ink drawings merge abstracted and expressionistic brush and line work, breaking down figures into simple forms. Characterized by his "every figure" symbology in their emptied out flat bodies and hollowed eye sockets, these figures are both represented as sexualized and mask-like. Under the Banner of Concern is a psychedelic visual experience that is a place for introspection rather than pure image-making. The book features an introduction by author, artist, professor and curator Trinie Dalton.

Presley is a prominent figure in the US independent music scene, most notably known for his music as White Fence which he has performed as since 2010, as well as his collaborations with Ty Segall and Cate Le Bon (as DRINKS). He has exhibited select artwork around the country and previously published his art and poetry in You Don't Have Your Eyes Yet (2010) and Mush (2016).

"It's rare when you get an artist who creates the music and the artwork that makes it shine, but Tim Presley does." -- It's Nice That

"For more than a decade, through various permutations of his craft/muse, he continues to evolve via his paintings, his music, and his very presentation of the self." -- Aquarium Drunkard
