Last fall on Dead Oceans, Kansas City-based musician Kevin Morby released his newest album Sundowner, “a vision of the Midwest that feels mythical and enormous” (Pitchfork). Last Saturday, he made his network television debut on CBS This Morning. Playing with Waxahatchee’s Katie Crutchfield, they performed Sundowner’s “Campfire,” plus the title track as a web exclusive. Additionally, the duo presented “Lilacs” and “Fire” from Waxahatchee’s Saint Cloud. It was filmed at Los Angeles’ Bootleg Theater and features a hybrid of their respective bands - Jacki Warren (vox/bass/keys), Cyrus Gengras (guitar/keys), and Justin Sullivan (drums). Morby and Crutchfield sing into microphones adorned with roses as they join forces for the first time performing each other’s song on a national stage, giving fans a charming glimpse into their close chemistry.

Praise for Sundowner

“His observations require perception—perhaps Morby’s greatest skill as a musician. Plenty of what he sees is mundane, but it’s Morby’s gift that the quotidian never feels boring.” - Pitchfork

“The dawning of new love, the acceptance of profound loss, navigating an old life with a new set of eyes. The spirit of Sundowner fossilized in earnest.”
- Aquarium Drunkard

“Sundowner has the feeling of a conversation a person is having with himself or his loved ones, trying to make sense of things with music that was at once fragile and roughhewn, music that gets at a core strain of Morby’s songwriting DNA while simultaneously suggesting the great emptiness of the Midwest American landscape.”
- Stereogum

"one of Morby's best and most intense records." - Uproxx

"Sundowner...evokes alluring visions of middle American scenery: golden valleys, whooshing rivers, long stretches of empty highway, and the sun setting on a vast pastoral landscape. This imagery paired with Morby's lyrical storytelling, capturing feelings of sorrow and tenderness, make for a heavily pensive record." - Exclaim
