“A glacial, continuous ambient piece that draws on the epic beauty of nature, [Music For Psychedelic Therapy is] a thoughtful blueprint for what the future of this field might sound like: spacious, delicate, comforting, a pastel mural of sound.” - Pitchfork

Today, Jon Hopkins reveals a transcendent new collaboration with Brazilian techno producer ANNA, “Deep In The Glowing Heart (Night Version).” The original version of “Deep In The Glowing Heart” is found on Hopkins’ Music For Psychedelic Therapy, released last November on Domino. Talking about the original, Hopkins said there is a feeling that “music can cleanse you, music can guide you through.” Today’s “Night Version” takes you on a very different journey. Evolving over a month-long trans-Atlantic collaborative process, “Deep In The Glowing Heart (Night Version)” feels like an explosive release of energy, inspired by Hopkins’ return to regular DJing this year. With early versions of this track being premiered to huge crowds by both artists at their DJ sets across the world – including ANNA at Coachella and Hopkins at Fabric – “Deep In The Glowing Heart (Night Version)” is now available to hear widely for the first time.

Of the collaboration, Hopkins says: “I first came across ANNA’s music through her track Hidden Beauties, which I found myself playing in DJ sets all the time and always goes down so well. I then asked her to remix Singularity and the results were so amazing I was super keen to work with her again but in a more collaborative way, rather than just handing over stems. We went back and forth a lot and it flowed really well. I love how this one turned out, it’s such a meeting of our two styles.”

ANNA adds: “It is a big honor to be able to create music together with Jon. His music is part of my daily life, part of my meditations, my long walks and contemplative moments. My remix for his track ‘Singularity’ had a huge impact on my career and getting to know Jon better since then, and collaborate on this version of DITGH, it feels like our relationship has come full circle!”

Music For Psychedelic Therapy was Hopkins’ first full-length since the release of sister albums, the GRAMMY-nominated Singularity (2018) and Immunity (2013), and it was a departure in sound from these records; “an album with no beats, not one drum sound, something that is closer to a classical symphony than a dance / electronica record.”

Praise for Music For Psychedelic Therapy:

"A 64-minute rhythmless expanse of delicate electronics, immersive natural sounds and celestial choirs, it is meant to soundtrack a ketamine trip or, more broadly, guide listeners toward their own 'other realms.'" - The New York Times

“Jon Hopkins has turned in a collection of music perfect for your next lysergic acid-guided self-care session.” - The FADER

“Hopkins’ fusion of ambient, drone, and natural field recordings can’t be summarily dismissed. It’s simply too potent.” - The AV Club

“It’s DJ’s and producers like Jon [Hopkins] that are acting as the shamans, advising on the music and really working with scientists to figure out what sort of music lends itself to a trance-like state, as well as to bring out therapeutic qualities this music could reach”

- NPR Music

“Hopkins affirms his genius” - Uncut

“A gorgeous musical voyage that draws on ambient, drone and classical music - as well as the sounds of the natural world - and features not a single drum beat.” - The Independent

“This is Hopkins’ strongest album to date. It is also his bravest.” - Clash

“Soothing and transportive” - MOJO

"[Music For Psychedelic Therapy is] a transcendent journey toward serenity.” - Under The Radar

“Awe inspiring” - Brooklyn Vegan

“Post lockdown balm” - The Guardian
